MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE-1971

The fall of 1971 will see the largest population in the history of the College. Seven years ago Middlebury began a planned expansion to 1800 students. That total will be reached this year with the opening of the two new residence halls, Lang Hall, named for one of Middlebury's most loyal sons and long-time trustee, Fred P. Lang, and Kelly Hall, named for Mrs. Elizabeth B. Kelly, the all-coping Dean of Women for nearly twenty years.

Not only will Middlebury reach its projected population, but it will slightly exceed expectations due to a "reluctance" of students to match past figures for academic failure or voluntary withdrawal, and the continued pressure on admissions. Where many fine colleges have seen a slight dip in students applying, the class of 1975 which enters in the Fall of 1971, was selected from over 4000 applicants—a rise of approximately 10% in the applications from the previous year.

While the size of the College may change, curriculum alter, and faculty come or go, one thing remains perennial—every year sees a new form of student government. The main problem with student government is that there is usually very little which can be regarded as exclusively student affairs. Just as students in their interest in curriculum, faculty appointment and budgets have insisted in recent years that there is little that can be exclusively faculty or administrative concerns, so, what students do or don't do with leisure or judicial matters affects the subtle matter of "spirit" that finally distinguishes a college from an education emporium. The second problem with student government is that it is difficult to locate "secondary communities", i.e., relatively important and stable social groups which are less than the size of the total college. Middlebury has attempted all manner of student governments based on various sub-groups—fraternities, dormitories, classes, organized activities—and none have proved overwhelmingly successful. This fall yet another experiment is to be tried using academic departments as the secondary community. Each department will select a student advisory council and that council will in turn send a member to the Student Forum which in turn appoints students to the various all-college committees where the real policy work of the College is carried on. This new system will, it is hoped, solve the problem of a meaningful sub-group since departmental choice is some sign of common purpose and it will amalgamate student governing with all-college committees where matters of genuine common interest among faculty, students and administration can be discussed.

At the May meeting of the Faculty several proposals governing the pattern of studies were passed and there has been no time to assess their exact impact on the College. What emerges from a barrage of legislation is the possibility of greater flexibility in planning the rhythm and even the pattern of studies. For exceptional students there is the College Scholar program which says in effect—"If you have the aspirations, talent and energy, if you are an intellectual 'self-starter' as it were, then you may be permitted to devise your own pattern of studies." College Scholars may construct inter-departmental majors, special research, extended papers, and creative projects with the sole proviso that they convince their advisor and the College Scholar Committee that they have a coherent pattern of inquiry.

For all students, the Faculty passed legislation which permits more variation in the pace of progress toward the 32 term courses and 4 Winter Terms required for the degree. Instead of the standard four course per term pattern, students may for valid reasons accelerate or decelerate for a term depending on their larger educational needs.

Finally, while student government is eternal in its changeableness, faculty governance is not so variable. In the fall of 1971, however, there will be some considerable changes in the make-up and function of major faculty committees. It may well be that this rearrangement will produce some new proposals in the not yet thoroughly digested arrangements which abolished all-college distribution requirements in May of 1970.

DENNIS O'BRIEN
Dean of the College
